One quote and one small question a day for a week. Five minutes is plenty.

How to use this guide

Each day has one quote, one question and some space to write. Read the quote slowly, answer the question in a sentence or two, and stop. There is no right or wrong answer.

Simple routine

- Pick the same time each day, such as with your morning coffee or before bed.
- Read the quote out loud once.
- Write a sentence or two. Short is fine.
- Close the page and carry on with your day.

If you miss a day, simply pick up where you left off. This is not a test.

DAY 1

> Gratitude turns an ordinary day into one worth remembering.

Today's question

What is one small thing from today that you would miss if it were gone?

DAY 2

> Notice what is already enough. It is more than you think.

Today's question

Name three things in your home or life that quietly support you.

DAY 3

> Be thankful for the quiet mornings. They are not guaranteed, and they are enough.

Today's question

Describe a quiet moment from this week. What made it good?

DAY 4

> Thank the people who never ask to be thanked.

Today's question

Who helped you recently without being asked? How could you thank them?

DAY 5

> You can be grateful and still want more. Both can be true.

Today's question

What are you grateful for in where you are right now, even if it is not where you want to stay?

DAY 6

> Look back at how far you have come, not only how far there is to go.

Today's question

What is something you handled this year that once felt too hard?

DAY 7

> Gratitude is a habit, not a feeling. You build it a day at a time.

Today's question

Which of these seven days did you enjoy most, and how can you keep it going?

Your week in review

Read back over your answers. Then write down:

Three things I noticed this week

One small habit I want to keep

Keep going, one calm day at a time
